

I am a huge fan of satellite radio. I subscribe to both XM and Sirius. I haven't listened to broadcast radio since, for one simple reason, broadcast radio is absolutely horrible. The programming is repetitive and tiresome, and 20+ minutes of commercials per hour is unacceptable. If I am paying for a satellite radio subscription, I should be able to hear any content I want, including local traffic and weather. If the local broadcasters are worried about their market share they should improve their programming instead of lobbying congress and the FCC to bully the Satellite radio providers.

Why try to limit awesome new technology? What's wrong with competition? Competition only benefits the consumer. As a taxpayer, I urge the FCC to allow the satellite radio providers to broadcast any content they wish, including local traffic and weather.

Mike Ross
Concord, CA